long been the intention of Mr. Davis not only to abandon Richmond and Peters-burg, but to abandon Virginia altogether. Gen. Lee opposed such a proposition on very substantial grounds, not the least of which was the one that to leave Virginia would be to lose the mainstay of the confederacy and per-haps half of the army. When this no-tion of Mr. Davis became known it caused considerable feeling among Vir-

he evinced so much feeling in reference to Mr. Davis' refusal to make terms that I said:
"I wish you had called a conference your officers after Davis' refusal.'
"What would they have done?' said

Lee.
"'They would have taken matters into their own hands,' said I, 'and authorized their own hands,' said I, 'and authorized to the latter own hands,' said I, 'and authorized you to deal with the matter according to your own judgment.'
"Gen. Lee thought a moment and then said: 'It is too late to remedy mistakes now.' His officers would have takes now.' His officers would have done just that thing, for Lee had the confidence not only of the soldiers but of all the confederacy a thousand fold more than Davis had. Indeed, Davis was seriously disliked by our people. He kept in position about him his peculiar pets, and the offener they lost a fight, the more frequently were they promoted. History will never credit Jeff Davis with being either a model executive officer or a great general. His book will doubtless convict him of being neither."
